

Body

The physical nature of man is that which we can see and feel. The material organism animated by the mind and the spirit. The desires and needs of the body can influence and govern our behaviour. It is prone to injury and disease and ultimately it is subject to death.

Mind

Mind is the aspect of man comprising the faculties of perception, understanding, feeling, judging and determining. The cognitive structure we use to interact with our environment. This structure develops through learning and our ongoing experience of the world around us.

Spirit

The spirit of man is the immaterial and invisible part of a man, the vital principle or essence of man, the life force that motivates human activity. The human spirit drives great feats of endurance and survival. It gives man a spiritual awareness. It is the source of desire for spiritual satisfaction that often goes unfulfilled. Spiritual solutions are needed.

Spiritual solutions

Despite the marvels of the human body, the power and ability of the mind and the feats of endurance and survival of the human spirit, mankind continues to struggle with aspects of the human existence.

A lack of peace and contentment, growing issues with addictions, problems with health and wellbeing and a lack of sure answers to the life and death questions are all symptoms.

There is a spiritual solution to these problems.

We can assure you – from our own experience and the Bible – that when the Spirit of God unites with the human spirit, people find real and tangible answers to these problems and those difficult life and death questions.

Peace and contentment

Our view of peace and contentment is often measured in terms of the needs and desires of our body and mind. There is no doubt that man has some basic needs to be met. However, society can influence our mind to create a perception that there are things that we must have to attain peace and contentment resulting in the ongoing pursuit of these things.

There is a spiritual solution. Real inner peace and contentment can be found when the human spirit is at one with the Spirit of God. This is a real and tangible experience.

Sunday 19th October.....at 1.00 pm

Dealing with addictions

Efforts to overcome addictions can be aimed at the body using drug replacement programs such as nicotine patches. The mind can be involved in cognitive behavioural programs and psychological counselling. These interventions can have some success and can achieve a harm minimisation outcome and a means of coping with the issue but perhaps not an absolute solution. Some view addiction problems as spiritual problems. We have found that when the Spirit of God unites with the spirit of man there can be a solution.

Sunday 19th October.....at 3:30 pm

Healing and wellbeing

Modern medicine achieves great feats with the human body using medication and surgery. Research endeavours to find answers to incurable illnesses. The development of cognitive skills and psychological interventions are used to attain health and wellbeing through the mind and provide answers for the hurts and stresses of life. God is a healing God and a providing God. When the Spirit of God is at one with the human spirit the nature of God can provide miraculous healing and wellbeing. There is a spiritual solution.

Sunday 26th October.....at 1.00pm

Life and death questions

The body is subject to death. In this respect we all have a terminal illness. This gives rise to those difficult to answer life and death questions. What happens when I die? Is there a resurrection? Is there a heaven or hell? Where do I stand with my creator? The mind can construct theories and answers to these questions often to allay our own fears and concerns. Are these theories and answers correct? What is the reality? When the Spirit of God dwells with the spirit of man there is certainty, assurance and real answers to these questions.
